

THE STAR'S DAILY PICTORIAL PAGE

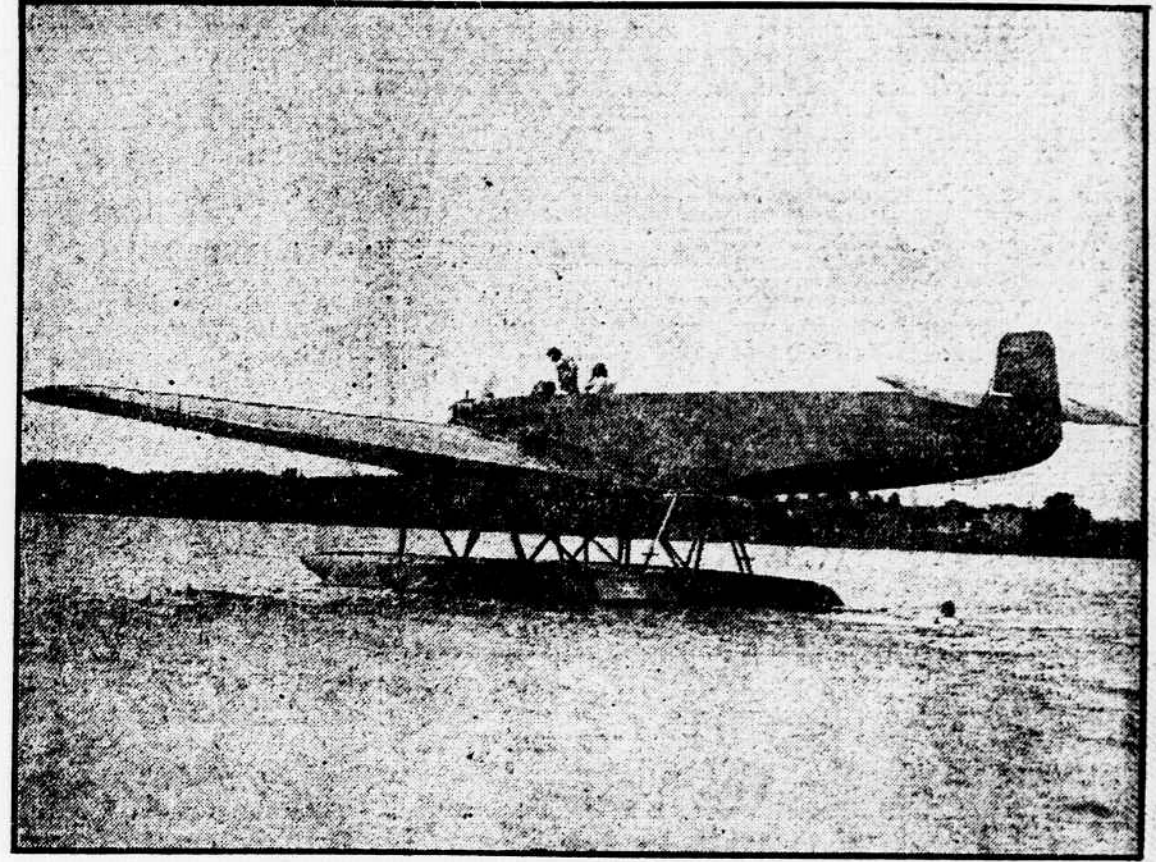

THE EVENING STAR, WASHINGTON, D. C., SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1922.

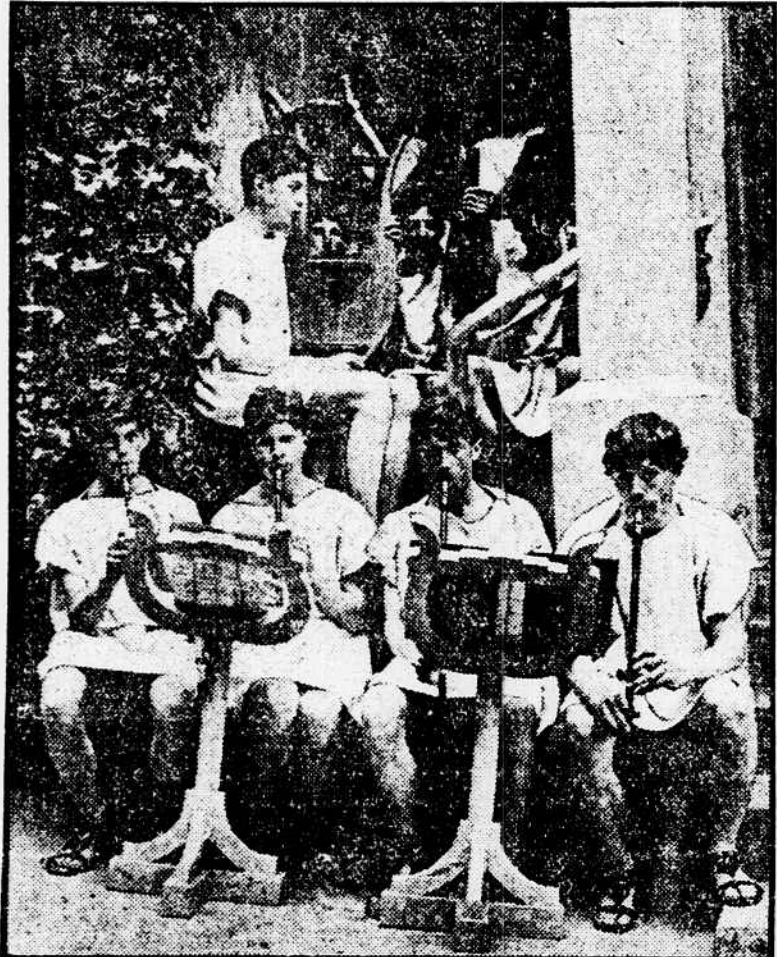

Detective Sergeant Fred Sandberg of the Washington police, takes a nose-print of one of the Soldiers' Home herd. Experiments are being conducted in nose-prints as a means of identification of cattle, and Mr. Sandberg, up to the present time, has never found two noses alike. National Photo.

William Middleton, scientist of the forest insect investigation bureau of the Department of Agriculture, has started work against the caterpillar, which has been so destructive recently in Alaska. It is reported that many square miles of forest have been killed by the pest. National Photo.

Uncle Sam's new super-battleplane, embodying all the advanced aeronautical knowledge of American and foreign builders, photographed at the naval air station. A. H. G. Fokker, who during the war constructed German planes, is directing tests of the new machine, which is an adaptation of the German Fokker. National Photo.

Musicians in the Greek play, "The Antigone of Sophocles," produced in the new Greek amphitheater at Bradford College, Berk, England. Copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

Crosses country to identify dog. Edwin Rayfield traveled from California to Brooklyn to testify that the dog he gave his mother was the one over which a dispute had arisen, ending in the Brooklyn courts. Copyright by Keystone.

Ancient Cuban game may be tried out in the United States. At least, Emilio Eguluz, champion jai-alai player of Cuba, is now in this country and may make an effort to establish the sport. Jai-alai, as played in Spain and other Latin countries, is known as pelota. Copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

A royal reunion at Belgrade, Serbia. Left to right: Princess and future Queen of Rumania, Princess Helena, youngest daughter of the King and Queen of Rumania; the Queen of Serbia, formerly Princess Marie of Rumania, and Crown Prince Carol, future King of Rumania. Copyright by Keystone.

Where magic is made. This factory, or laboratory, of Thurston, the magician, is located at Whitestone, L. I., and it is there that he experiments with ideas, improves the old tricks of the magicians and delves, now and then, into the "spirit world." Copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

Two sisters of Gen. Pershing, who are his guests in Washington. At left, Miss Mary Pershing of Lincoln, Neb. At right, Mrs. D. M. Butler of Lincoln, Neb. Copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

This painting, bought at auction for $450 by C. J. Fitzgerald of New York, is worth $25,000. The owner has been offered that amount for the picture. After a thorough cleaning of the painting, it developed that it was the work of Isaac Van Ostade, a Dutch master of the seventeenth century. Copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

"Window-pane" fad hits the New York beaches. The blooming monacle never was very popular in America, but when Champion Jack Dempsey came back from the British Isles with a glass perching below his eye-brow, the fad was started, and this is a result. Copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

The Washington hiker need have no trouble in selecting a suitable wardrobe for her favorite pastime. The knickers and slip-on sweater, with a leghorn sport hat, go well together. The color scheme is tan and brown. Copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

New York girl, Miss Marie Perkins, weds Don Fabrizio Colonna of Italy. Photo taken at the wedding. Left to right: Prince Prospero Colonna, father of the groom; the bride and groom, Marchesa Stefano Antonio D'Amico, sister of the bride; Reginald Perkins, the bride's brother; daughter of Marchesa Negrotti-Cambrasi, and son of Countess Benicelli. Wide World Photo.